HIS MIRTH-PROVOKING TRIBUTE TO THE IRISH RACE-OTHER SPEAKERS.

scarcely no saint's memory was ever kept so green as that of St. Patrick, and never is it kept so loyally green as by the Society of the Friendly Sons of St. strick, who indulged in their 100th anniversary dinner onico's last evening. John D. Crimmius, the sident, was unable, on account of sickness, to be His place as toastmaster was filled by Vice-President James S. Coleman. The guests included representatives of sister societies, John Slorne aping for St. Andrews; Frederick De Peyster, for st. Micholas; Elihu Root, for the New-England; for St. George's. Besides these at the guests' table Kelway, W. H. McElroy, the Rev. Dr. Henry A. Brann, the Rev. William Lloyd, John W. Corcoran, justice of the Superior Court of Massachusetts, and Justice of the Sepew, who entered late, after having channey M. Depew, who entered late, after having space at the dinner of the St. Patrick's Club at the spoken at the dinner of the St. Patrick's Club at the Hotel Brunswick. Among those at the other tables, at which were seated nearly 250 members and their nesis, were J. J. O'Donohue, who read President Crimme's letter of regret, James R. Cuming, John H. jedge Van Brunt, Major John Byrne, General G. W. Wingate, John C. Brophy, Judge Morgan J. O'Brien. Edward W. Scott, Frank C. O'Reilly, T. E. Crimmins, Maurice J. Power, Peter F. Meyer and L. J. Callanau. The reading of President Crimmins's letter of repet was followed by a speech in response to "The Day We Celebrate," by the Rev. Dr. H. A. Brann, of the Church of St. Agnes. Dr. Brann is a pleasing speaker of the scholarly style. He discoursed seriously upon the contributions of Irish genius to the civilization of the world, giving instances of the infuence of Irishmen in the material and religious derelopment of European nations, as well as their work in this country. Speaking eloquently and fervently upon the claims of the people of his native land upon the kindly consideration of Americans, he closed by expressing the hope that the dawn of the next anniversary day of the birth of Ireland's saint would, through the work of the present Ministry of Great Britain, find the old nation marching on the high road to material and spiritual prosperity.

In the absence of General Martin T. McMahon Justice John W. Corcoran, of the Superior Court of Massachusetts, responded to the toast the "United

The toast of "Ireland" was allotted to Joseph II. Cheate, who, looking over the long range of thirtyfre years since he first dined with the society, resalled the names of many distinguished Irishmen, now dead, with whom he had been associated on those censions. He paid an eloquent tribute to the poblest characteristics of the Irish race, and the leeds they had wrought for civilization, both in European countries and in America, Then, suddenly departing from seriousness, Mr. Choate plunged into wit and satire. "What," he asked, "have they not done to build up the great material prosperity of the United States! What have they not done to adorn and illustrate American politics? Where is the Department of Public Works? (Laughter.) What offices, great or small, have they not filled? What spolls, rich or poor, have they not carried off What fiesh pots in every part of the lond have they not exhausted! Home Rule! I understand Mr. Depew is already illuminating another gathering now that subject. I shall leave that to Depew and Gladstone, who understand the question so much better than I. I prefer to speak of their rule away from home so characteristic of the Irish. (Laughter.) This morning I put on my hat and Shamrock scarf and ventured out. The first man I met was my friend Recorder Smyth. I met him at the burbe shop. He was preparing that smooth, that smil-ing. This implacable, that terrible face of his. Great shouts of laughter.) I will not ask him to stand up and be identified, because I conscientiously believe that it would be an invasion of his consti-tutional rights." (Roars of laughter.)

Mr. Choate continued in the same velu saying how he himself and the representatives of the sister so-cieties would have added to the interest of the St. Patrick's day procession if they had followed it in their humble way as illustrating the dominating power of the Irish in this city and in the Nation. Referring to Mayor Gilroy, Mr. Cheate said that he believed he was the only man present who had not voted for him. "I voted for the other man," he said, "but I have forgotten who the man was; but it is no matter who he was for no man can stand up against Thomas F. Mr. Cheate added that as Irishmen had done so much for America he would like to show them what else they could do for America. "It is in your hands," "and that is that you should all, with your children and your children's children and with the spoils you have gathered in this great American Empire City march back to your native land. The n needs you; he is clamoring for you. and the Grand Old Party to which I belong has been so severely disciplined that it can get along without (Uproarious laughter and applause.) When the other side singing, 'We are coming Father Gladstone, 15,000,000 strong, how the British lion would hide his diminished tail. (Great laughter.) And you would not only rule Irelend, but how you would dominate all the other sections of the British Empire! Have you not learned here how to colonize! (Fenewed hughter.) You understand the principles of persistent, iron-handed rule. We have forgotten the first principles of home rule ourselves. What native New-Yorker knows anything of the value of the native suffrage! We should look around us, and learn for the first time in seventy-five years how to govern ourselves.

at langhter and appleuse.) As Mr. Choate took his seat, amid much confusion ughter and general jollification, Recorder Smyth made his way to the guest table and shook the orator's hand with much cordiality, amid the applause of all present.

St. Clair McKelway followed in response to the toast "The Press."

Channey M. Depew spoke at a late hour for "The State of New-York"; the Rev. William Lloyd, for "The Poets and Poetry of Ireland," and William H. McElroy for "The Ladies."

the course of the evening a cable dispatch signed by the president and other officers of the society was sent to Mr. Gladstone, congratulating him on his restoration to health, and thanking the Liberal party for its persistent labors in the interest of Home Rule

MR. DEPEW GREETED WITH CHEERS. HE MAKES A WITTY AND ELOQUENT SPEECH

BEFORE THE ST. PATRICK'S CLUB. Where the light stele through shades of emerald hne and fell upon a board garnished with shamrocks members of the St. Patrick's Club of New-York City met last evening at their tenth annual dinner. in the big banquet room of the Hotel Brunswick that they sat, at tables trimmed with broad bands of green and looked upon walls bearing the the United States and Ireland side by side. The flag that floated over Erin's green isle was almost everywhere, yet the place of honor was reserved for the Stars and Stripes. From the gallery came the maste once played by the minstrels of Ireland. At the dinner Edward E. McCall presided. Near film was Chancey M. Depew, one of whose ancestors was at the end of the guest table ant Patrick J. Gleason, of Long Island City, the descendant of a long line of Irish ancestors. The others at the guest table were Dr. William B. Walice, John A. McCall, Thomas Jordan, Thomas Byrnes, Edward C. Sheehy, John H. McCarthy, Robert A. Van Wyck, Joseph A. Newberger, James M. lugh Rellly, Henry Bischoff, jr., L. A. Glegerich, amon M. Ehrlsch and David McAdam. The men who sat at the tables at the Brunswick eed that the dinner was well served, that the lecorations were undeniably Hibernian, but from the ments expressed by some of the speakers it was plain that they asserted an Irishman's right to differ. There were several interruptions to some of the speeches and the eloquence and wit of Mr. Depew as once stopped in its easy flow by the comments of the interested listener. There were prolonged cheers then Chauncey M. Depew was introduced by President Mr. Depew made his twenty-first Irish

*Speech to the club three years ago.

"On my twenty-first birthday as an Irishman," began Mr. Depew, "I spoke to you. I have been the loyal sons of St. Patrick for many rears. I believe you all come from Ireland. (Laugh-ler.) I once had an Irish ancestor and the thing he considered the most was his brogue. Said he: If I should lose that brogue I would be obliged to retire from public life.' A quiet man was that Irish ine. He lived in a neighborhood where gave to his countrymen as much as possible. He believed in the good old Irish doctrine that charity begins at home. He could rell his tongue in a way that would make these shamrocks turn green with envy. He had that brogue-that immortal broguewhich gives eloquence to speech, piquancy to wit and is a most indomitable fell for getting out of a If that ancester of mine had only given to me his brogue I would have been Mayor of this town. (Laughter.) "I had to register last fall. Not so much for the purpose of voting, for the election was an unim-portant affair, but to perform my duties as an American citizen. (Laughter.) The registry office was only a few feet from my door, yet the registry cierk had never heard of me. Such is fame in a great city. There was an Irish reporter around and he wrote all about it and put in the mouth of that clerk as rich a brogue as could be found in Tipperary. When I read that brogue in the paper the next morning, I said that registry clerk was destined for high distinction in this State. The next day he sent his affidavit to the newspapers that he never had a brogue at all. There is no future for that man in this world. (Laughter.) Then a Saxon Democrat wrote an editorial in which he said that I was trying to ridicule the Irish.

"The Irishman is a citizen of the world. He is the only citizen of the world. The conditions at home have made him the universal solvent of the unity of the races. No tyranny is able to destroy the spiritual and intellectual life of the Irish man and woman, (Applause,) The Irish woman is a home ruler. Every married Irishman has learned that from his wife and every unmarried Irishman the year 106s Hubertus de la Feld, who is said to have accompanied William the Conqueror into England, himself to where he is. In France he is a French-man, in Italy an Italian, but not in New-York. (Laughter.) In the United States he is an American of Americans. The world is interested in the martial valor of Ireland and she takes an interest in the woes of Ireland because the Irishman has taught the world that Ireland deserves better than she has received. It was the success of the American Revolution which moved the soul of Gratian. Then came O'Connell, the cidle of the American Revolution, and last came that genius for organization who united the British party in family, came to this country with his neighbor and removed to Albany, having accepted a call from the waln. The flower and fruitage of 100 years of Irish statesmanshin was in Charles Stewart Par nell. (Applause, cries 'You're right, Mr. Depew,' and several dissenting voices.' McMahon, or Court of his way should Great Britain be so angry because freland wants home rule and is likely to get it lione rate is the genus of American Institutions. The English say that the Irish cannot govern themselves, yet all the world over the Irishman is a success. He lands as an imalgrant, without a dollar, and in a few years he owns corner lots in Fifth ave. It takes many years for a foreigner to become an American citizen, yet in six months the Irishman is a voter. He is an Alderman the second year, and in the lifth year he is in the Legislature. (Laughter.) His children become judges and hold high offices to the satisfaction not only of their own countrymen, but also to the country who place them in office. After the Commons have passed a hill for home rule, and the House of Lords has defeated it, the friends of home rule. For its ultimate success home rule depends upon Mr. Gladstone. Let us say to Mr. Redmond and brighters what the Irish people want, and that any man who is false to that is a traiter to his country. (Applause.) FOR KINDERGARTENS IN THE DISTRICT.

PROMINENT WASHINGTON PEOPLE TAKE STEP

TO INTRODUCE THEM. Washington, March 17 (special).-Miss Clam Barton president of the Red Cross Association, opened her drawing-rooms to-day to a company for the purpos of organizing a kindergarten association. The object of the association is to create fresh interest in th kindergarten and make it a feature of the public schools system of the District. Among the ladies showing their interest and braving the snowstorm were the President's wife, accompanied by Mrs. Elssell, wife of the Postmaster-General. Among others present interested in the movement were Mrs. Harriet Lane Johnson, Mrs. Hearst, of California, who, with Senator Stanford's wife, has made kindergartens a great work in San Francisco; General Greely's wife, Miss Kate Field, Professor Doolittle's wife, Mrs. Sarah Stevens, of Brookline, Mass.; Mrs. Pollock, who opened the first free kindergarten in Washington; the Rev. Dr. Shippen and Mrs. Shippen, Mrs. Hamlin, wife of Dr. Hamlin, of the Church of the Covenant Carroll D. Wright, Dr. Harris, Commissioner of Edu-cation, and Benjamin Mann, son of Horace Mann.

Before the organization of the association a talk was given by Mrs. Virginia T. Smith, of Hartford, a lender in kindergarten work in that city, to who efforts largely is due the introduction of the kinder garten system in Hartford public schools. Dr. Harris briefly told of the beginning of kindergartens in St. Louis. Mr. Mann gave some interesting ac-counts of the free kindergartens in Washington from his personal experience. During the work of organlzing. Carroll D. Wright was asked to take the chair. Mr. Wright appointed Miss Kate Field, Mrs. Sarah stevens and Mr. Mann a committee to draw up the form of organization. The name given was Columbian Kindergarten Association." that Mrs. Cleveland would accept the nomination for President, but she declined, as did Mrs. Hearst. It was finally decided to leave the office of president open until the next meeting. It was decided that the first work should be the enrolment of members; then the association would bring its influence to bear upon the Commissioners of the District to have kinder-gartens in the public schools.

TO CONTINUE A SUCCESSFUL FAIR.

The success which has attended the bazaar given by the Vis Unita Fortior Association of the Drew Ladies' College in the ballroom at Sherry's has de-cided the committee to continue the display for this afternoon and evening, to accommodate the throngs who are still anxious for an opportunity to witness the fair. The pecuniary success of the enterprise is assured, and a handsome sum will be realized in ald of the hall which the alumni propose to erect to the memory of George Crosby Smith, for many years president of the college.

Benjamin Hazard Field was born on May 2, 1814. at Yorktown, Westchester County. Mr. Field was a descendant of an old and honorable English family, a brief history of which is necessary to complete an oblinary sketch of Mr. Field. Until the middle of the sixteenth century the family name was spelled Feld and after that Felld, Feeld and Field, all sometimes terminating with an "e." From records in the possession of the family it seems likely that the family is descended from the "de la Felds." The prefix "de la" was dropped by many families in the fourteenth century, in consequence of the wars with France having made it unpopular in England. In the year 1968 Hubertus de la Feld, who is said to of his birth by a family reunion at his house. At held lands in Lancashire which were granted to him for military services. In the twelfth century John de la Feld appears on the records at an owner of lands in the same county. Anthony Field moved to Harrison's Purchase, West chester County, where seven sons and two daughters were born to him. His third son, John Field, was the grandfather of Benjamin Hazard Field. John Field was married at Jamestown, R. L. in 1763. His wife was the daughter of William Hazard, of that place. They had elateen children, of whom Hazard Field, the father of Renjamin Hazard Field, was the oldest. Hazard Field by his second wife, Mary Balley, had three sons, Wright, Benjamin Hezard and Joseph.

Benjamin Hazard Field got his preliminary education under the parental roof in Westchester County. His school work was finished at the North Academy. After completing his academic education Mr. Field decided to begin a mercantile life and entered the office of his uncle, Hickson W. Field, in this city. St. Paul. Norwich, Conn., March 17 (Special).—Charles C. Bliss. Morwich, Come. March 17 (Special) Charles C. Ribs, the leading jeweller of Eastern Connecticit, died of heart disease at his home. Norwichtown, this morning, agod sixty-four years. He was never married. Mr. Bliss was born in Norwichtown in a house built in 1556 by his ancestor. Thomas Bliss, who came here from England, and who was one of the thirteen original settlers of Norwich. The house is still standing, and was continuously the home-stead of the Illias family until C. C. Rilss sold it not long ago. Mr. Bliss was a fine mechanic and an enthusiastic mathematician. He invented a lock, a faucet and a system of lighting stores with kerosene, all of which inventions were successful.

EX-SENATOR D. H. ARMSTRONG CRITICALLY ILL. St. Louis, March 17.-Ex-Senator David H. Armstrong was attacked by heart failure at the Richelle Hotel today, and, owing to his advanced age, it is feared be cannot survive many hours. Scantor Arm-strong was once in the United States Senate and is well known all over the country.

Mr. Armstrong was born in Nova Scotla in 1812, went to St. Louis in 1837, and for years was a teacher in the public schools of that city. Then he secame a politician, and held various municipal ofnces, among them that of Controller. Under Fillmore (1850-53) he was postmaster of St. Louis. Dur ing the Civil War he was a Southern sympathizer, and was imprisoned for some of his utterances. Upon his relea e, he helped B. Gratz Brown and others to reorganize the Democratic party, having been a r ter of the State Central Committe from 1852 to 1870, when the Democrats regained control of Mi souri. soon afterward he became president of the board of Police Commissioners; and he held this office in the fall of 1877, when, upon the death of Sen-ator Bory, Governor Phelps appointed him to complete the unfinished term, reaching through two sesdons. Mr. Armstrong was a man of great energy, but not a public spenker. When the Mi-souri Pacific railway was embarassed in 1875 Colonel Armstrong was appointed receiver. He was several times a candidate for the United States senatorship at regu-lar elections, but was always defeated.
